Acknowledgements

The seed for this book was sown when the editors met in Adelaide in 1986 for two small symposia focusing on the impact of Christianity on the lives of Aboriginal peoples. We are grateful both to the Australian Association for the Study of Religions (AASR) for asking us to address their annual conference, and to the Aboriginal Studies and Teacher Education Centre who allocated some of their Key Centre funds to bring participants to their one-day workshop.

We are also indebted to Victor Hayes, General Editor of AASR Publications, and, through him, to members of the AASR Publications Committee for their faith in and support of this project.

Over the past 18 months, through hundreds of pages of correspondence, countless telephone calls and, it seems, interminable conversations, we have been assisted and guided by a host of people who have shared with us their knowledge in this field. Some of these people are contributors — many more are not. We will not attempt to list them all, but three people must be mentioned:

Penny McKibbin for constant support and encouragement, and one invaluable suggestion which transformed and immeasurably improved the book; Rick Sarre who, while he may not know it, helped us sleep more easily; and Dany Falconer-Flint who read and re-read every article in this book, and tackled the daunting task of trying to redeem academics from their more glaring stylistic sins. We are truly grateful that she shared her time so generously in the knowledge that in doing so she has lessened the burdens of two of her friends.

Finally, our thanks go to the James Macartney Hill Bequest for assistance in meeting publication costs.
