

Notes on contributors

Riccardo Armillei is a Research Fellow at RMIT University. His research interests lie at the intersection of transnational human mobility, particularly applied to vulnerable minority groups, contemporary debates about the effects and legacies of colonialism on policy-making, and theoretical and ideological approaches to cultural diversity and social justice.

Bohdan Bernatskyi is a Max Weber fellow at the European University Institute and a Senior Lecturer at the Kyiv-Mohyla Academy where he teaches diplomatic law and the course on sanctions.

Marina Gorbatiuc is a scientific researcher. Her research interests include international relations and political science.

Bruno Mascitelli is an Honorary Professor at RMIT University and has been active in the European Studies environment for some time. An academic at Swinburne University and holder of a Jean Monnet Chair (2016-2019), Bruno was President of the European Studies Association from 2004 until 2021. He has published widely on European and Italian political economy and is a co-author of his latest book The road to the European Union: Albania and the Italian "partner".

Ian Parmeter is a Middle East specialist at ANU's Centre for Arab & Islamic Studies. He has also worked in the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, the Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet and the Office of National Assessments; he was formerly Australia's ambassador to Lebanon and counsellor at Australia's embassy in Moscow.

Raymond Taras is a professor in the Department of Political Science at Tulane University. His interests include issues of Central and Eastern Europe and Russia, multiculturalism, xenophobia, Islamophobia, ethnic conflicts, and response to refugee crisis and immigration in the receiving countries. He has authored or edited over twenty books: on the collapse of the USSR, Russia's identity in international relations, the rise of liberal and illiberal nationalisms, the internationalization of ethnic conflicts, the dangers of xenophobia, the critique of multiculturalism, the impact of fear on European foreign policy, and the makings of nationhood.

Bruce Wilson is a professor at RMIT University and the Director of the European Union Centre of Excellence at RMIT. He leads research and debate on EU-Australian relations, place-based innovation systems and regional development, and shares advice on building partnerships between Australian organisations and their European counterparts. He has published extensively and presented at EU forums on Smart Specialisation, place-based innovation and sustainability, and is co-editor of the Australasian Journal of Regional Studies.
