

Notes on contributors

Alexander Buchen is an undergraduate student at the University of New South Wales.

Anna Christoforou is currently a PhD candidate at the University of Canterbury's National Centre for Research on Europe, having earned her Master's from King's College London in Geopolitics and Security studies. Her current research explores the politics and ethics of technological bordering within Europe. She has worked in media monitoring both in the UK and in New Zealand and has a particular interest in the politics of irregular migration.

Charlotte Gadea is an undergraduate student at The University of Melbourne.

Emma Hartshaw is an undergraduate student at the University of Canterbury.

Sophia King is a postgraduate student at the University of Otago.

Bruno Mascitelli is an Honorary Professor at RMIT University and has been active in the European Studies environment for some time. An academic at Swinburne University and holder of a Jean Monnet Chair (2016-2019), Bruno was President of the European Union Studies Association of Australia and New Zealand from 2004 until 2021. He has published widely on European and Italian political economy.

Alge White is a postgraduate student at The University of Melbourne.

Bruce Wilson is a Professor and the Director of the European Union Centre at RMIT. In this role, he provides insights to and leads research and debate on EU-Australian relations, encouraging mobility for staff and students, and for building partnerships between Australian universities and organisations and their European counterparts. He also leads the Jean Monnet Centre of Excellence for Smart Specialisation and Regional Policy at RMIT, looking at interventions to improve the living and working conditions of people in metropolitan and rural city-regions in Europe, Australia and Asia. He has had long experience in working with all levels of government on organisational and social change and is committed to linking researchers and policy makers with city and regional governments in policy formation related to social and economic policy, innovation, lifelong learning and environment. He was a founding Co-Director of Pascal International Observatory.