The Australian Association for the Study of Religions is a professional organization with a membership of more than 300, made up of teachers, academics, students and others with knowledge and experience of religious traditions.

Many members also hold membership in other societies representing specific disciplines and cross-disciplinary fields. The AASR aims to function as a meeting place where the study of religion in its broadest dimensions may be fostered. It owes a considerable debt of gratitude to the Charles Strong Trust for financial support.

Membership confers participation in the AASR program which includes:

- * Annual Conferences
- * Access to AASR Publications (books and mongraphs)
- * A.R.S. Review (articles, book reviews, news and notes on personnel, publications, seminars, conferences, course offerings, school and tertiary curricula).
- * AASR Women and Religion Caucus
- * Affiliation with the International Association for the History of Religions (IAHR)
- * Strong ties with institutions in Melanesia and New Zealand.

Editorial

Over the last two years, there has been considerable discussion about change to the Review. It has been proposed to up-grade it to a fully refereed journal, partly so that articles written for it would receive greater recognition by university administrations. If this proposal was adopted, the Review would be produced twice a year containing only articles and book reviews. A separate bulletin would be produced mid-year containing news and information about the members of the AASR.

At the same time, it is likely that the style and format of the Review would change. We have been considering a variety of sizes and styles for cost of appearance, cost of printing, and cost of postage. A slightly smaller format which would fit in a B5 envelope would cut the cost of envelopes substantially. As desktop publishing programs have improved in capacity, we should also be able to print to film from disk rather than laser output, which should improve the quality.

Detailed proposals will be discussed at the Annual General Meeting in Christchurch in July. We would welcome your feedback about such proposals.

Thank you to those who have contributed to the journal. It is also a pleasure to receive articles that have not been solicited for consideration for the Review - a small but significant sign that the journal, even as it is, continues to make a significant contribution to those who are interested in the study of religions.
